EICHMANN, MURDERER OF MILLIONS, EXPLAINS AT TRIAL IN JERUSALEM HOW HE INTRODUCED NAZI "KNOW-HOW AND EFFICIENCY" TO FORCED EMIGRATION OF JEWS; HAD THEIR BEST INTERESTS IN MIND; SAVED SOME; FREED OTHERS; WAS NEVER ARROGANT WITH THEM; DID GOOD DEEDS

Among the specific charges against Eichmann are the deportation of thousands of Austrian and Czech Jews to Biala, Kovno and Minsk where they were executed; the fomenting of the infamous Kristall Nacht (Crystal Night) pogroms in Austria on Nov. 9, 1938, when Nazi mobs smashed the windows of Jewish shops, plundered synagogues, and beat up Jews, and the spoliation of Jewish property in Vienna and Prague.

Under questioning by his West German counsel Dr. Robert Servatius, the witness vigorously denied all these charges, says the New York Times. He insisted that the creation of a central office for Jewish Emigration in Vienna actually had brought about better and more efficient treatment of Jews.

He took credit for having applied his organizational talents to the Jewish community and thus having smoothed the apparatus for making Austria "Judenrein" or free of Jews.

Right after the Nazi Anschluss on March 11, 1938, the invasion of Austria and its incorporation into the German Reich, Eichmann said, the Nazi police policy in Austria was to "arrest, disperse, dissolve" Jewish groups. But he said he had reversed the policy to make their "emigration" easier.

"Was pressure exerted on Jews to emigrate?" Dr. Servatius asked.

"No!" Eichmann replied. "The Jews wanted very much to emigrate. The difficulties were created neither by the Jews nor Germans but by the receiving countries."

A main pillar of Eichmann's defense is that other countries, especially the Western powers, had evinced no enthusiasm for receiving Jews and that the British in particular had hindered Jewish emigration to Palestine.

The indictment charges that Eichmann confiscated Jewish properties and used part of the funds to finance the expulsion of Jews from Austria. But Eichmann explained that "all the countries willing to accept Jews demanded a minimum currency remittance." "I cannot recall any country that did not insist upon it," he declared, says the New York Times. "Within the framework of this arrangement, destitute Jews were able to get the minimum amount required by the receiving countries."

Prosecution witnesses have charged that Eichmann was unbearably arrogant in Vienna, that he once slapped Dr. Richard Loewenherz, one of the leaders of the Jewish community, and that he issued dire threats to Viennese Jewish leaders during the "Crystal Night" pogroms in retaliation for the assassination of a minor German Embassy official in Paris in 1938.

Eichmann testified that, far from having been arrogant to Dr. Loewenherz he had been the Jewish leader's trusted confidante. Dr. Loewenherz was always running to him with problems, Eichmann said, and once complained to him about the arrogance of other Nazis, especially those in the Vienna housing authority.

Eichmann said Dr. Loewenherz and other Jewish leaders were in jail when he went to Vienna in 1938 to establish the Central Office for Jewish Emigration. He said they had been released after his arrival.

He said that later, when Reinhold Heydrich, chief of the security police, ordered the arrest of all Polish Jews he had obtained exemption for a number of Polish Jews in Vienna because "in a nutshell, I could not have run the emigration operation without them."

He said large amounts of money had been sent by the American Joint Distribution Committee and other Jewish organizations to the Viennese Jewish community and that he had been instrumental in getting the state bank to offer a favorable rate of exchange to help finance emigration.

Eichmann told about a massive agreement he had made with Dr. Loewenherz when the doctor asked him for the remains of Dr. Herzl, says the New York Times. "I said to him, 'Loewenherz, this is a matter in which we are both interested but it is not within my competence,'" Eichmann testified.

"I am going to have to do a lot of running about on this and you will have to do something in return. I want you to get 8,000 more Jews to emigrate from Vienna."

Eichmann did not explain why, but the deal failed. Dr. Herzl's body was not brought to Palestine until after the establishment of the state of Israel in 1948.

Eichmann said he had not instigated the "Crystal Night" pogroms and that he had been "filled with consternation" when he had learned that the Jewish administrative buildings had been burned. "I had just set the Jewish organizations on their feet and now everything was being ruined," he said.

He told the court his first move was to salvage the archives and files of the Jewish communities, especially correspondence "that was of vital importance to the emigration work to which I had devoted myself."

Whenever he was asked to explain his signature on an incriminating paper, Eichmann pleaded that he had merely been passing on orders from superiors. Dr. Servatius showed him a telegram dated Feb. 13, 1941, in which Eichmann informed the state police of a plan to ship Viennese Jews to Poland.

"Obviously this was a special order from Hitler," he said, reports the New York Times.

He was unable to recall all the details, he said, but it appeared that Hans Frank, Governor General of occupied Poland, had refused at first to receive Viennese Jews and that Baldur von Schirach, Gauleiter of Vienna, had been obliged to appeal to Hitler for a special order.

Eichmann denied that he had ordered executions of inmates of the Theresienstadt ghetto as punishment for bribery and smuggling. Shown a statement made at a war crimes trial in Vienna in 1948 by Capt. Siegfried Seidl, commandant of Theresienstadt, which said the executions had been ordered by Eichmann, the prisoner retorted:

"I never issued such an instruction and I never had anything to do with ordering executions."

Adolf Eichmann explained how he had achieved success by introducing Nazi "know-how and efficiency" to the forced emigration of Jews.

Eichmann, accused of complicity in the murder of millions of Jews, told his Israeli judges he had wanted a good exchange rate for American gift dollars so destitute Jews could flee Vienna in 1938 and 1939.

That was when Eichmann was serving his apprenticeship in the "Central Office for Jewish Emigration." He contended that even in those days he had in mind the best interests of the Jews.

The former lieutenant colonel in the Gestapo (Secret Police), spent most of his seventh day on the stand relating what he considered had been good deeds for European Jews.

He asserted that he had saved some Jews from arrest and freed others from jail, says the New York Times. He contended that he had managed a relaxation of censorship for Jews in the Theresienstadt ghetto in Czechoslovakia — after several had been hanged for smuggling letters in and out.

The prisoner told the court he had never been arrogant or rough with Jews and that he had even tried to get the remains of Dr. Theodor Herzl, the founder of political Zionism, shipped to Palestine as the Zionists had requested. All he had asked in exchange was that the Zionists speed Jewish emigration from Austria by 8,000 a year, he said.

Eichmann spoke in soft tones keeping an eye on the bench to see how the judges were taking his testimony. He gave the court a light moment by complaining about the punctuation of a minor document. "There is a comma missing here," he emphasized, frowning at a paper on his desk. The judges smiled. "But he looks like any ordinary mass murderer," protested a buxom woman to her companion a few months ago at the beginning of the show trial of Adolf Eichmann.

This lengthy proceeding lacks drama mainly because the chief character is drab. Like the woman, most spectators are disappointed when they gaze at the defendant in his glass cage. Instead of finding someone resembling Erich von Stroheim, the monocular Prussian villain of the silent films, they see a shriveled, ashen-faced individual whose only special feature is a tight mouth.

It is hard to feel any stirring reaction about this completely colorless person. Israelis lose their temper at Eichmann only when he writes. The former Nazi officer makes rapid notes whenever testimony touches upon his responsibility for sending Jews to death camps, reports the New York Times. He is accused of having directed the murder of millions of Jews.

Eichmann holds a steady pen and it is this demonstration of control that apparently irritates the spectators. The spectacle of Eichmann at his desk scribbling away was too much for one man. Rising from his seat, a Transylvanian rabbi called out, "What are you writing there, murderer?"

He became the fourth person to be ejected from the court. A short of disgust, and a pulchritude have been the extent of Eichmann's visible reactions to the trial. The Eichmann smile is used sparingly and generally illuminates only the left side of his face, the side away from the public.

But the prisoner looks deathly as his crucial hour nears. His face is gray and sunken, his ashen cheeks drawn in deeply.

For a few days Eichmann was forgotten as the court pondered the question of who was to blame for the failure to rescue the Jews from the Nazi holocaust.

Zionist leaders found a defense in documents from archives of Dr. Chaim Weizmann, former world Zionist leader and first President of Israel. These documents indicated that the terrible dimensions of the tragedy had been learned from Joel Brand, the man through whom Eichmann made his proposal to exchange "Jews for trucks."

The Zionist leaders had pressed the British for drastic military action, including the bombing of Auschwitz. They begged for the acceptance of Eichmann's offer. The British stalled every proposal, the documents said, with the explanation that Soviet consent was needed.

Adolf Eichmann angrily denied that he had recommended shooting 1,200 Serbian Jews in 1941.

Showing anger for the first time in nine days of direct examination by his counsel, Dr. Robert Servatius, Eichmann leaned close to the microphone in his glass cage and cried harshly: "I declare once again that I did not give this order!"

"Eichmann suggests shooting" were the words on a document presented at the trial of Eichmann, a former Gestapo (secret police) colonel who is charged with having directed the annihilation of millions of Jews during World War II, says the New York Times. Franz Rademacher, a Nazi Foreign Ministry official, wrote down the words after they had held a telephone conversation over what to do with Serbian Jews of military age following the German invasion of Yugoslavia.

Rademacher, who was the Foreign Ministry official concerned with Jewish affairs, told United States prosecution authorities in Nuremberg, Germany, in 1948 that he telephoned Eichmann after the Nazi envoy to Belgrade, Felix Denzler, demanded deportation of Jews at the Sabac concentration camp, forty miles west of Belgrade. Denzler was apprehensive because Sabac was in an area infested by partisans and "the presence of Jews contributes considerably to unrest."

Denzler proposed deportation to occupied Poland. But Eichmann rejected this solution, according to Rademacher, who wrote in the margin of Denzler's report:

"According to an opinion received from Department IVD4 (the Gestapo Jewish affairs section headed by Eichmann), deportation to the General Government (occupied Poland), to Russia or the Reich is impossible. Eichmann suggests shooting."

Rademacher, who skipped bail in 1952 while awaiting decision on an appeal from a sentence by a West German court and who is now reported to be living in Cairo, told American authorities that he was sitting in the office of his superior, Dr. Martin Luther, when he spoke by telephone with Eichmann.

"I wrote down the key words of Eichmann's replies and pushed the paper across to Luther," Rademacher said.

"Eichmann said the military people were responsible for order in Serbia and they would simply have to shoot the rebel Jews."

"When I repeated my question, he simply repeated the word 'Shoot!' and hung up."

Eichmann frowned and set his lips in a thin line as Dr. Servatius read Rademacher's testimony, says the New York Times. "I never made a statement of this sort!" Eichmann cried. "I could not have done so because such a statement would have far exceeded my authority."

He recalled that when the Israeli police showed him the document in pre-trial interrogation he was immediately "aware of the severity of the allegation." As a bureaucrat, he said, it was very peculiar that Rademacher should have dealt with the matter "simply by writing down a few remarks in the margin of a document."

"Correspondence on much less important matters was carried on with bureaucratic accuracy," Eichmann declared. "And it seemed strange to me that such an important matter should be dealt with on the basis of a telephone call."

Eichmann read extracts from a book to show that orders to shoot hostages had come from military commanders and other authorities. He said that at Nazi Foreign Ministry, "I was involved in some executions of hostages and that this 'shocked' the Foreign Ministry."

These representatives were reprimanded for "undiplomatic, arrogant actions," Eichmann asserted. "I declare once again that I did not give this order!" he shouted and sat back and pursed his lips.

The police have taken Eichmann's false teeth away as a precaution against suicide. Consequently, his sunken cheeks make him look more and more cadaverous.

Dr. Servatius had Eichmann deny any responsibility for the deportation of Jews from the Netherlands, Belgium, Denmark, Norway, Greece and Yugoslavia, says the New York Times. All he did, Eichmann maintains, was to supply the transportation after his superiors had ordered the deportations.

Eichmann admitted having issued instructions for the censorship of letters written by Jews in the Netherlands to persons abroad.

Asked by Dr. Servatius to explain this in view of his denial of any responsibility for censorship orders at the Theresienstadt camp in Czechoslovakia, Eichmann replied: "In this case it was a matter of vital Reich interest. Holland's proximity to an enemy country, England, justified such a preventive measure."

"Department VI (Gestapo Intelligence and Counter-Intelligence) referred the matter to us and our department had to act upon it."

Eichmann conceded having gone to the Netherlands to attend a Nazi conference on what to do with Amsterdam diamond polishers and furriers, who had been exempted from earlier deportation because they were needed for the war effort. He said he attended only as an observer and took no part in the decision that the furriers be shipped to the Auschwitz death camp in Poland.

Dr. Servatius introduced several documents in an attempt to prove that anti-Semitic measures in the Netherlands, especially the deportation of more than 100,000 Jews, had been ordered by Eichmann's superiors and again that all Eichmann had done was to provide the trains.

One document submitted to the court showed that in September 1942, Lieut. Gen. Hans Elbin Rauter, Nazi police chief in the Netherlands, reported to Heinrich

The ushers were: Walter Soles; and Avi Rosen, of Oakawa, Ont. Howard Dyan, cousin of the bride, was junior usher. A dinner and reception was held at the Synagogue, with three hundred guests present. Mrs. Bonas, mother of the bride, wore a rose-lilac-coloured, satin peau de sole gown, with full skirt, trimmed with self-applique, sequins, and beading; also a matching head-dress; with a lilac-coloured orchid corsage. Mrs. Segall, mother of the groom, wore a light-blue peau de sole gown, drawn with work in seed-pearl-beads and rhinestones; with skirt that fell in soft pleats. Her headpiece was of that material in leaf design; and her orchid corsage was tinted to match in colour. Mr. and Mrs. Barry Phillip Segall went by motor to Cleveland, Ohio, for their honeymoon. ...your idea of a vacation is strolling on a mile long soft white sand beach, then splashing and swimming in a gentle surf warmed by a kindly gulf stream to a mellow "T" (a rarity for New England waters)...if dining in a picture windowed setting overlooking the sea enjoying mouth melting sea treats, or succulent steaks captures your gustatory fancy, if accommodations mean gracious, tastefully appointed rooms looking out to the sparkling blue deep of the Cape, if outdoor sports means improving your golf on our 8 hole pitch and putt green or practising on our all weather tennis court with sailing, motorboating, and water skiing nearby...if it's righteasing, you're a "spin" from the storied places of our American folk lore — entertainment? — enjoy variety shows with the stars, first run films, and dancing to superb bands in our cafe and cocktail lounge...Remember the Cape is the home of the great summer theatres which play the Broadway smash hits.

If you incline to any or all of the above in an atmosphere of friendly people, you'll want to stay and stay at the Sea Crest Hotel, by-the-sea, under-the-stars of captivating Cape Cod.

HOW TO HIRE A BAND

If you want your party to be a success, you want entertainment, good entertainment. It's the easiest thing in the world to pick up the phone and call a band-leader and set a price, and forget about it — till he turns up.

Hire reliable musicians, hire talented musicians. If you want some extra sparkle (and who doesn't, these days?) hire a couple of singers as well. Tell your band-leader exactly what you want.

If you want experienced, talented entertainers — many of them stare in their own right — call RU. 1-3908 first. If we can't make it, then go ahead and try somewhere else. But try the BEST first!

In Memoriam: Dr. Isaac Schwarzbart

BY S. L. SHNEIDERMAN

With the passing of Dr. Isaac Schwarzbart, world Jewry has lost one of the few survivors of a great generation of Polish Jewish leaders.

His sorrow over the destruction of the Jewish community of Poland transformed Dr. Schwarzbart, essentially a lively, humorous, and sprightly man into a profound pessimist, a kind of Jewish male Cassandra, as he labeled himself in more cheerful moments. Even his tremendous enthusiasm over the growth of the State of Israel was clouded by anxiety over the perils that threatened the young Jewish state, as well as Jews throughout the world. Hence, Dr. Schwarzbart continually warned world Jewry against the danger of forgetting the genocide practiced on the Jewish people — it could happen again.

To the last moment of his life, Dr. Schwarzbart dedicated all his energy, his profound intelligence, his talent as a speaker and writer, to eternalizing the memory of the Jewish martyrs and heroes in the ghettos and concentration camps during World War II. Two days before his sudden death he addressed a memorial meeting of Polish Jews in New York on the occasion of the anniversary of the Warsaw Ghetto uprising. This was his last public address on the destruction of Polish Jewry. On the very same morning he had begun to write the second part of his memoirs which was designed to treat of the catastrophe.

At the end of 1950, the first volume of Dr. Schwarzbart's memoirs, entitled, Between Two World Wars, was published by the Farlag Dos Poilishe Yidntum in Argentina. This 400-page book represents an important contribution to the modern history of Polish Jewry, particularly the history of the Zionist movement in Poland.

In the epitome of his first volume, Dr. Schwarzbart clearly set forth the plan of the second volume. It was to deal with the tragic period, 1939-45, when he was named the Jewish representative of the Polish parliament-in-exile since he had served as a member of the last Polish parliament.

From this vantage point Dr. Schwarzbart had had an opportunity to maintain contact through the underground channels of the government-in-exile with the suffering Jewish masses in Nazi-occupied Poland, and he was thus enabled to inform the Jewish world of the details of the great calamity which impended. Unfortunately many of his cries of alarm and warnings went unheeded and indeed there was a tendency to regard them as exaggerated.

Dr. Schwarzbart thoroughly and carefully noted every event, every rumor, and every conversation with Jewish and non-Jewish leaders in those days. He collected a large amount of materials about the martyrdom of Polish Jewry.

Particularly exhaustive is his documentation of the callous role that the anti-Semitic Polish population played in the extermination of more than three million Jews in Poland. Nor did the Polish government-in-exile extend much more sympathy and understanding of the Jewish plight. Dr. Schwarzbart related to me many shattering episodes of his conflicts with the leaders of that government. He also gave me the opportunity to read many of the documents and personal notes bearing upon this subject.

Dr. Schwarzbart possessed the systematic character of a researcher, the analytic sense of a lawyer (which he was by occupation), and the flexibility and tact of a statesman. All of these qualities were at the service of his profound commitment to Jewish values and the Jewish community. This sense of commitment informed both his writings and his public addresses. Wherever he spoke, whether at Jewish mass meetings or from the rostrum of the Polish parliament, his audience was overwhelmed by his passion, which not even his opponents could gainsay.

Dr. Isaac Schwarzbart had behind him a long and rich history of community work, particularly in the Zionist movement. Born in 1888 in the city of Chazanow in western Galicia, he was active in the Zionist movement from his youth. As a student at the old royal University of Cracow, where he was graduated from the law school, he was the chairman of Hashachar, the Federation of Jewish Students in western Galicia.

During the First World War Dr. Schwarzbart was an officer in the Austrian army. After the war he practiced law in Cracow. But his principal interest was Zionist activity and as a member of the Jewish National Council he took an active part in formulating the Jewish demands presented to the Peace Conference in Versailles.

Chiefly, he devoted himself to the task of uniting the various factions of the General Zionist movement in Poland. When this proved unsuccessful locally, he moved up to the forum of the Zionist Congresses. There, thanks to his efforts, the World Federation of General Zionists was formed. Later, he was chosen a member of the Actions Committee; for some time he was its vice-president, and remained a member of the Actions Committee to the end of his life.

In 1938, at the age of 50, Dr. Schwarzbart was elected to the sixth Polish Sejm. This was on the eve of the Catastrophe, when the Polish regime was preparing to introduce the Nuremberg Laws in that country. This program was never officially presented to the Sejm, but it existed in theory and was partly put into practice. Ghetto benches for Jews were introduced in the universities and the Jewish students were confronted not merely with a summus cunctis but with a summus nullus. Pogroms were common in the small towns, and Nazi ministers were the welcome guests of the Polish government, not only on hunts in the Polish woods but in the Polish universities as well.

In view of this situation, there was controversy within the Zionist movement in 1938 as to the desirability of participating in the elections. Some Polish Zionists called for a boycott. But Dr. Schwarzbart took the position that in those tragic times Polish Jewry needed a voice in parliament to protest the persecutions which were directed exclusively at the Jewish people.

The representation of Polish Jewry was reduced at this Sejm to a bare minimum — in all, only five deputies and one senator represented the national and religious sectors of Polish Jewry. The brief, nine-month session during which the last Polish parliament was active was a period of tribulation for the Jewish representatives in parliament. Their protests were treated with contempt; they spent long hours waiting in anterooms of ministers with appeals for redress.

On the eve of Hitler's attack on Poland, Dr. Schwarzbart was attending the twenty-first Zionist Congress in Geneva. Learning of the Hitler-Stalin pact, he returned to Poland to take part in the last session of the Polish parliament in Warsaw. This was held on the second day of the Nazi invasion.

In his subsequent flight from occupied Poland, Dr. Schwarzbart saw the crimes committed by the Germans. As a member of the Polish government-in-exile, first in Paris and later in London, he followed closely and anxiously the Nazi program of inhumanity which culminated in the extermination of the large and creative body of Polish Jewry.

Ever after, Dr. Schwarzbart devoted himself to the idea of collecting the heritage of the thousand-year-old Jewish community in Poland. In his capacity as director of the organization department of the World Jewish Congress, year after year he called on Jewish communities all over the world to observe the anniversary of the Warsaw Ghetto uprising. He pioneered the idea of transforming this anniversary into a day of mourning in memory of the six million martyrs — an idea which he saw realized in his own lifetime. Unfortunately, however, he never lived to see the fulfillment of his plan for an exhaustive history of the martyrdom of Polish Jewry.

At Dr. Schwarzbart's funeral, the last Chief Rabbi of Cracow, Rabbi M. Steinberg, said in his eulogy that the deceased was the Jeremiah of our times. This is perhaps the most fitting characterization of Dr. Isaac Schwarzbart in terms of his generation.

Dr. Schwarzbart was a man of the world and of universal knowledge, who could quote Homer and Cicero in the original; a lawyer capable of the most abstruse and minute dialectic; a practical statesman who accepted many compromises during the course of his life. But during his last days he was possessed with a sense of mission, one he could not and would not compromise: to mourn the destruction of that great Polish Jewish community whose representative he had been on the eve of its extinction.

Himmler, head of the S.S. (elite guard), that he would try to obtain three trains weekly instead of two for deportations.

"Hope," Rauter said, "that we will have got rid of a further 30,000 by Christmas so that in all 60,000 Jews, about half the total number, will have been removed from Holland."

Rauter added that from Oct. 14, 1942, "the Jews of Holland will be declared fair game for all. . . . Any Jew found anywhere in Holland will be put in one of the large camps for Jews."

Eichmann told the court that a Professor Mayer had been refused permission to emigrate from the Netherlands because he was "an intellectual," says the New York Times.

Under close interrogation on this matter by Judge Benjamin Halevi, Eichmann tried to evade a direct reply, but, when questioned for the fourth time, he said: "I suppose the authorities were afraid that this man, because of his moral and intellectual capacity, could engage abroad in activities that might be detrimental to Germany." He added quickly:

"Of course this was not a case I could resolve on my own. I had to refer it to my superiors who rejected the application."

Eichmann denied he ordered inmates of a Jewish mental home in the Netherlands to be sent to a death camp so that the facilities could be converted to a military hospital. He said a statement given by Brig. Gen. Wilhelm Harster, chief of the Nazi security police in the Netherlands, that Eichmann had given the order "could not be correct."

The mental patients were killed in the gas chambers at Auschwitz. Eichmann insisted that it was Harster and the S.S. Commander for the Netherlands, Arthur Seyss-Inquart, who decided on closing the mental home.

"Later on they needed only a train, and this was ordered through the appropriate department of the Reich security headquarters," Eichmann said. "This is how the matter was referred to my department."

Eichmann, in other testimony, again insisted that he was nothing more than a transport officer for the deportation of Jews in the early stages of World War II, says the New York Times. He seemed to reveal in explanations of the intricacies of the Gestapo organization and he insisted that it had not been his bureau but rather other offices in the Reich security headquarters that had committed early brutalities against the Jews.

Eichmann, speaking from his bulletproof glass cage, annoyed the German-born judges by speaking in the accent of the Austrian lower classes, rolling his R's in a manner reminiscent of Hitler and stretching his sentences to infinity by the liberal use of "eins-weise" ("on one side") and "and-ers-weise" ("on the other side").

Once the presiding judge, Moshe Landau, weary by the interminable convolutions of an Eichmann sentence that ran to 250 words, broke in to say: "If we are to understand him properly, he must speak shorter sentences. Of course, we know that in German the verb always comes at the end, but he is making us wait too long for it."

But Dr. Servatius had trouble controlling his garrulous witness and had to signal frequently to Eichmann with an upraised palm. At times Eichmann seemed to be running his own defense and he irritated the court by assuring it from time to time that "the documents which will confirm my statement will appear later on in the course of the testimony."

The court reminded him coldly that it was irregular for an accused person to submit documents and that he had better leave that function to his counsel.

Once Eichmann startled the court by asking permission to read the testimony of another witness, Maj. Hermann Krumey, his former agent in Vienna. Krumey has been examined in West Germany, says the New York Times. "This is not in accordance with customary procedure," Judge Landau said with a frown. "I shall permit it now, but usually this is a matter for the defense counsel."

Dr. Servatius explained that the Krumey document could easily have been overlooked "in the ocean of material confronting me" and that Eichmann had "just reminded me of it and it would be well to state the matter now."

Eichmann's point in reading Krumey's testimony was to make an apparently trivial correction: Krumey told of arranging for the transport of Jews to Poland in April, 1940, and said he was doing this for Eichmann's Bureau IV B 4. Eichmann explained that at that time the bureau was known as IV D 4.

The gallery had one happy moment. That was when Judge Landau coldly ordered Eichmann to stand when the court spoke to him. Carried away in a blasefaced ocean of charis and almost hidden behind a comb of green foliage, Eichmann had apparently forgotten that he was a prisoner in Israel.

For a brief instant his pallid face looked flushed when the court rebuked him. He jumped to his feet and cried: "I apologize, your Honor."

He then replied negatively to the court's question of whether he had been director of the Reich Central Office for Jewish Emigration from 1939 on.

He said he had merely carried out the "practical administration" of the office. It was Reinhard Heydrich, chief of the security police, who headed the office, he said, and Heinrich Mueller, head of the Gestapo, was administrative chief.

Eichmann stressed also that he was never Director of Jewish Affairs for the whole Reich security headquarters, but only for the Gestapo, says the New York Times. He also described other security bureaus that dealt with Jewish matters.

One handled legal problems, another dealt with maintenance of the gas vans that were used to kill Jews before the gas chambers were built and a third bureau tackled problems of mixed marriages and the status of "half-Jews and quarter-Jews."

In the 250-word sentence that prompted the court's demand for brevity, Eichmann said his Gestapo bureau was set up to bring order into the deportation and evacuation of Poles and Jews in the area of Poland that was annexed to Germany in 1939.

"It cannot be denied that this orderliness was, to some extent, to the benefit of the people who were deported, if one might be allowed to use the word," he said.

He told of deportees having been shut up for eight days in sealed freight trains because of bad management and a women and children suffering from freezing conditions in cattle cars. He maintained that the minutes of a meeting of Nazi operational group commanders in Berlin in September, 1939, cited in listing him as having been present.

"I was not even in Berlin at the time," he testified.

The first count of the indictment charges that Eichmann and others arranged the mass slaughter of Jews in Eastern Europe by the special operational groups.

Dr. Servatius said Eichmann's office had had absolutely no connection with those units. The defense also denied the prosecution's contention that Eichmann had been responsible for actions by subordinates attached to German legations in occupied or satellite countries.

Dr. Servatius quoted from an arrangement between S. S. (elite guard) Reichsführer Heinrich Himmler and Nazi Foreign Minister Joachim von Ribbentrop in August, 1941, says the New York Times. It provided that S. S. officers serving abroad should be under the orders of police attaches.

The prosecution had submitted several messages between Eichmann's office in Berlin and the attaches. It had said these messages proved the attaches had received orders from Eichmann and had reported to him.

But Eichmann denied that he had the authority to carry out any policy that conflicted with orders by the Foreign Ministry. When he was shown a letter from the Foreign Ministry complaining against the arrest of Jews of Hungarian nationality by Eichmann's men, Eichmann commented: "Subordinate officers, in their zeal to seize and round up Jews and deport them, must have seized Jews of Hungarian nationality."
